Digital Customer Experience Strategy

Digital Customer Experience is a 5-day senior leadership course delivered by Mars Training Centre UK in London, Dubai, Barcelona, Milan, and Istanbul, designed for directors and executives responsible for the customer experience strategy of their organisations.

Customer expectations have been reset by digital-native firms in every sector. Customers now compare their bank to their food-delivery app, their hospital to their streaming service, their government department to their preferred online retailer. The senior leader's job is to lead that experience as a strategic priority — across channels, across functions, and across the full customer lifecycle.

Across five focused days, you will sharpen the senior leader's view of digital customer experience. You will examine how leading organisations build experience as a strategic capability, work through the practical disciplines of journey design and measurement, study where AI is reshaping customer interaction, and leave with a customer-experience roadmap for the business you lead.

The week moves from customer experience as strategy, through journey, insight and voice of customer, into digital channels, AI and personalisation, then operating model, measurement and change, closing with a personal action plan.
